

Title: Primary Doctrine Writer (Intelligence Doctrine)

Reports To: Doctrine Development Team Lead

Location: United Arab Emirates (UAE)

Overview: TechWise Global is conducting a Capabilities Enhancement Project for a military client in the UAE. This project is sanctioned by the U.S. Government and supports national security objectives in the Middle East. This project involves multiple aspects, including developing enhanced training capabilities and comprehensive doctrine that are required for full-spectrum operations in a joint, combined, interagency environment. We seek highly qualified, subject matter experts to join our team.

Job Summary: One of our experts must be a specialist in contemporary intelligence operations and associated interactions with other function-specific specialties (e.g., operations, logistics, fire support, etcetera). The intelligence specialist will produce products that are consistent with the overall program design, delivered on time, and developed within budget. This specialist must be fully capable of functioning semi-independently and in a team environment. Specific qualifications and related information are described below.

Essential Functions: Work as part of a multi-faceted capacity building effort that is creating operational and tactical doctrine for a major command of the UAE military. Collaborate with teammates and key client personnel to develop intelligence-focused doctrine that is: client specific; based on time-proven principles; and covers organizational, employment, and training activities from operational through tactical level. Explain and demonstrate functional linkages between the intelligence process and military decision-making activities. Describe the role and intellectual impact of intelligence preparation of the operational environment while assessing interactively complex, dynamic problems in contemporary operational settings. Research the military and interagency doctrine of the U.S. and other friendly governments, to identify aspects that pertain to client requirements. Assess existing client doctrine, including joint and service-specific publications. Synthesize applicable doctrine to develop narrative that is concise, relevant, and readily understandable by client personnel. Integrate proposed intelligence doctrine with other TechWise Global doctrine products, to ensure consistency of themes, symmetrical terms, integrated concepts, and standardized format. Work closely with Arabic language translators to convert English language narrative into well-written Arabic prose. Determine the client's intelligence infrastructure and linkages with internal and external entities. Build trust-based, professional relationships with the client's intelligence personnel, to recognize and address client requirements. Solicit and integrate client recommendations into doctrine products, to increase client acceptance and foster shared understanding of underlying concepts. Develop and update an intelligence-focused execution plan that describes tasks, schedules, performance standards, and deliverable products for the client organization. Train select client personnel on doctrine concepts, development methods, and related staff actions, in order to enhance the client's operational capacity and effectiveness.

Required Qualifications:

- Former U.S., British, or Australian officer who retired as a Colonel, Lieutenant Colonel, or service equivalent rank

- Served as an Intelligence Officer at a Division, Air Group, Naval Battle Group, Marine Expeditionary Force, or similar command

 - Intelligence-related responsibilities of commanders and staff personnel;
 - Missions and functions of Joint Intelligence Operations Centers;
 - U.S. and other friendly government military joint doctrine that pertains to intelligence roles, functions, and actions;
 - Intelligence products and processes that support planning, executing, preparing for, and assessing joint, combined, interagency operations;
 - Interagency intelligence collaboration and multinational intelligence sharing;
 - Systems-based assessment methodologies;
 - Joint targeting and related collection management processes;
 - Reconnaissance/surveillance operations from a multi-discipline approach; and
 - Unmanned aerial vehicle operations and links to intelligence product development
- Experience writing joint doctrine or other service-level publications
- Proven abilities to lead and achieve superior results while operating in diverse, rapidly changing operational settings
- Exceptional oral and written communications skills
- Proficient with Microsoft Office, especially Word and PowerPoint
- Possess active U.S. Secret or higher security clearance (or its equivalent)
- Possess a valid U.S. Passport or country of origin Passport

Strongly Desired Qualifications and Professional Experiences:

- Served as a Battalion or Squadron Commander
- Served as a Senior Intelligence Officer or analyst at a joint and/or major-level command (e.g., combatant command and service-level headquarters) within the last five years
- Served as the Director of Intelligence for a joint or major component command within the last five years
- Ten or more years of military staff experience in strategic and operational planning, doctrine development, and policy formulation
- Worked with foreign military forces in an advisory and/or training assistance role
- Masters degree in an intelligence field, national security studies, or international relations
- Graduate of the School of Advanced Military Studies, service equivalent program (e.g., School of Advanced Warfighting), or Senior Service College (e.g., War College)
- Taught at a professional military education institution
